What Is Alternative Medicine?

Alternative Medicine (also known as integrative medicine and CAM, for "complementary and alternative medicine") is any medical or health related practice that is not supported through rigorous evidence gathering via the scientific method. Many traditional, plausible, and even accepted medical practices fit into this group. Common examples include homeopathy, chiropractics, acupuncture and pressure, Ayurveda medicine, and faith healing.

Complimentary medicine is any alternative or integrative medicine used alongside conventional medicine.

SPOTLIGHT ON CQ RESEARCHER

Doing a research project on a current event or controversial issues? Check out CQ Researcher for in-depth reports, statistics, pro and con arguments, and much more! CQ Researcher started as a quarterly publication for legislatures and their staff to get information on current topics (CQ stands for Congressional Quarterly). To see what a report can offer, check out this one about vaccines.

Most Adults See Vaccinations as Important Safeguard

More than nine in 10 U.S. adults agree that vaccines are important to fight diseases from abroad and that families unable to afford vaccines for their children should not have to pay for them. One-fifth believe that because most children get vaccinated, parents should be free to decide whether to vaccinate their own children. Yet 85 percent agree that vaccinations should be required of teachers and other school personnel, and 72 percent say non-vaccinated students should not be permitted to attend school.

CAÑADA COLLEGE MAP 1968

Plenty has changed since Cañada College opened in 1968, but this campus map from the Library's archives probably looks familiar. The round circle in the middle, where the quad currently is located, represents an outdoor amphitheater. The dotted rectangular outlines show plans for a second academic building and an automotive technology center that were still in the planning stages on opening day, September 7, 1968. The college anticipated about 2,000 students enrolling the first year; 48 years later, over 7,000 students are enrolled in Cañada!
